“ I came to know Craig as our next-door neighbor for almost 12 years. In that time, we became good friends and enjoyed many late-night campfires in our backyards contemplating life and swapping stories about growing up in the country, our families, and whatever else we could think of that was going on in the neighborhood at the time. Even though we lost touch in the past few years as we moved away, the sadness I feel today leaves a lump in the back of my throat. Our family will miss him and always remember the good times we had.
