“ RIP Ethan Zane you've gained your little wings and have gone on to be with Jesus who I know Daddy and Mommy told you about many times. Rest now Little Bit you will be missed by all who loved and knew you and even those like me that never met you personally, but grew to love you through many prayers and tears. Rest easy until we all see you again. Continuing to pray for you Will and Shavona and the rest of your children and may you all feel His comfort and peace that only He can give.

This is Anna [Morley] Lucas writing as we travel this afternoon. I just read this little obituary, and my sympathies and prayers go out to your family. I remember when William was just a little boy when we lived near his family.

This is the second little boy that has gone to be with Jesus in the last few months. My sister Dorcas's son-in-law who came from a family of 11 children, had a little two-year-old brother who also died of a brain tumor just a few months ago. But telling you you are not alone doesn't really assuage any of the grief. A comfort is to remember that he is no longer suffering and is forever safe with the Lord. It's interesting to read the names of Ethan's siblings. At least three of Williams children have the same names as some of my nieces and nephews. My love and prayers at this unbearably difficult time.

“ I never met Ethan but for the last few months
I have prayed for him. Every day since I read the first post that he had a brain tumor and needed surgery he has stayed in my heart and was daily on my mind. There was just something about that adorable little boy that had the power to capture hearts through a simple photo.

Dear Shavona and Will and children:

Thank God for Jesus and what He did for us! Were it not for Him, I simply could not go on after losing a baby, especially as sweet and darling as Ethan. Knowing that when your arms went empty, Jesus' loving arms were full, holding and loving him perfectly... (absent from the body, present with the Lord). Last night I got to thinking about how Jesus is the same yesterday, today, and tomorrow. Although he knew Lazarus needed a healing, he waited two days and arrived AFTER Lazarus had died and had even been buried. The WORD tells us very poignantly and clearly... God wanted us to know... "Jesus cried.". since Jesus is the same today, I can only believe that seeing you are very beautiful, sweet baby in the valley of death, and literally knowing your hearts were breaking, I believe Jesus cried. and as he resurrected Lazarus bodily, I believe he immediately picked up your baby and held him close and kissed him. I believe He looked at you as he look at his mother from the cross and took care of her for the rest of her life. He did not leave her alone, but gave her a son to care for until the day her soul was with him in heaven. The word says that God is close to the brokenhearted. I would say at the very least, you are brokenhearted if not feeling crushed absolutely crushed! I totally believe there are angels making over Ethan and that angels our "all over" your entire family to help you get through this, and the rest of your life. I realize this is an extremely long message but I am feeling your grief so strongly I just could not say this in a just a few words. May God bless you and keep you and cause His face to SHINE upon you and give you PEACE. Remember He said in John 14: PEACE I leave with you, MY PEACE I give unto you....NOT AS THE WORLD GIVES GIVETH I UNTO YOU (He wanted you to understand THIS very, very clearly)! Then He said to do something that seems impossible under these circumstances..."LET NOT YOUR HEART BE TROUBLED...." (I am praying for an abundance of GRACE to give you supernatural strength...as if it were spiritual adrenalin. In closing, I love you guys and will be with you in spirit during Ethan's Life Celebration and will be praying for you every day.

This sweet beautiful child brought so much happiness to his family even for a short time and then Jesus decided it was time for him to come home. He will be with his family again someday and there will be happiness for all. Enough said.
