“ We were friends, way back in the 1970s, and we had a running joke about our names. Every time we ran into each other he'd call me Donnie and I'd make up a name to call him, and we stand around and talk for a few minutes. For some reason he's been on my mind for about a week. After writing the Rinky Dink book I'm always trying to remember the names of old friends, and for some reason I couldn't think of his first name. I made a note to myself on Dec. 19, to try and find out his name. All I had was Smith. I was very shocked today when I learned he had passed. He was a good guy, and we had a lot of pleasant conversations over the years. My deepest condolences to his family and friends. Don Harp
