“ I had the honor of being Shane’s Godmother many years ago and then became friends with she and Bob and the children. We lost touch and only saw each other occasionally at church. She was a remarkable woman and I loved the family so much. With all she had to do, she made time to have me over for dinner or to go out with them. Rest in peace sweet angel.

“ In addition to being a cousin, I used to babysit Shane and her sisters. They were adorable and sweet young girls who grew into lovely young ladies. It was always a joy to reconnect with Shane at family gatherings and to watch her become a caring and encouraging mother. I will never forget her smile and her caring heart.

One of my favorite memories of Shane was when she was around 3 years old.

He Pappap and Mammy Milam lived on a farm. When Pappap thought Shane was old enough, he let her go with him to gather the eggs. At first, she was given 2 eggs to carry to the house. Somewhere about the creek branch she broke the eggs. It wasn't on purpose. Either she fell or stumbled.

The next time she was there for a visit, wearing her new overalls, the same incident happened again.

The third time she was visiting, her Pappa just gave her one egg. The outcome was the same. Shane never made to the house with an egg in tact, but Pappa continued to let her try.
